MEAT WARS

"Trashed" male chicks aren't worth the time and cost of rearing. They're thrown away like so much garbage.

Vegetarianism on the Rise

A dead piglet, still in its afterbirth, lies outside its mother's "farrowing" stall. The piglet appears to have fallen out of the stall during its birth, and the crated sow was unable to reach it.

> "I recommend the vegetarian plate."

THE ANTIBIOTIC ARGUMENT

Europe Bans Treated Meat

EUROPE—The 12-nation European Economic Community (EEC) rang in the new year with a ban on imports of meat from animals treated with growth hormones, sparking outcry from agribusiness interests and threats of a trade war from Washington. The move resulted from a 1985 prohibition on hormone use within the EEC member nations, which led European farmers to call for similar restrictions on imported meats. Consumer groups, especially in West Germany, have been instrumental in educating many Europeans about the dangers of the use of such hormones as testosterone, estradiol, and progesterone — and the synthetic hormones zeranol and trenbolone - in meat.

Chickens — and other "factory farmed" animals — are routinely injected with growth hormones, stimulants and antibiotics in order to survive the ordeal of intense confinement.

BAD PHRASES

"Humane slaughter" - a contradiction in terms.

"Put to sleep" or "put down" - masks the reality.

"Euthanize" at animal shelters - euthanasia applies to mercy killings and most animals killed in shelters are healthy. Are we putting them out of their misery or ours? Yes, a lot of companion animals do not find homes, but perhaps if the public understood the reality of what happens to these animals, there would be fewer of them for us to kill.
